Summit unity on defence and world economy

The first full day of the Williamsburg summit yesterday underlined the main aim of the eight Western leaders to resolve their differences amicably.

• Economic policies were the subject of the first meeting after a "prayer for peace" service at the local church. President

West relations were discussed. Mrs Thatcher, who is due to resume her election campaign in London this morning, had a series of private bilateral meetings and urged Mr Reagan to modify a Bill that

Their statements made it clear that they wish to show the world, and the Soviet block in particular, that they can resolve their differences harmoniously and at the same time take initiatives that will ensure a sustained recovery.

Fears that the summit could be marred by confrontation between the French and Americans, as occurred at last year's summit in Versailles, were quickly dispelled by President Mitterrand. In a most conciliatory manner the French President explained to President Reagan during a private meeting before the conference that his call for a new Bretton Woods-style conference to revise the world monetary order had been misinterpreted.

Just as the leaders were converging on this neatly restored eighteenth century town, the Soviet Union threatened to begin moving missiles into Eastern Europe if Nato went ahead with the planned

Plea to modify sanctions Bill From Nicholas Ashford, Williamsburg

Mrs Margaret Thatcher has thrown the full weight of her authority behind British and European Community attempts to persuade the United States to modify an East-West trade Bill that would extend the reach of American laws to foreign countries.

In a 40-minute meeting with President Reagan shortly after her arrival in this picturesque and historic town which was first established by British settlers, the Prime Minister expressed the view that the Bill's extraterritorial and retroactive provisions would "cause difficulty" for Britain if for Britain if she Although carefully avoided being combative when raising the issue, her inter-vention was clearly designed to underscore British concern about the political, legal and economic implications of the Bill. British officials said the President had taken note of her

Similar expressions of concern were made by Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a separate meeting with Mr Donald Regan, the Treasury Secretary.

Congress is currently con-sidering legislation that would extend and toughen the 1979 Export Administration Act, which was invoked last summer by the Reagan Administration in applying sanctions against British and other foreign-based companies that supplied pipe-line equipment to the Soviet At the time Mrs Thatcher took strong exception to those controls as an infringement to British sovereignty. The re-vised Bill would strengthen the extra territorial controls by giving the President the authority to ban imports from companies as well as countries that violate US East-West trade controls.

The Prime Minister's meeting with the President took place in the garden of the eighteenth century Providence

Apart from their disagreement over trade controls, the two leaders were of one mind on practically all the other subjects they discussed, such as the need for sustained, noninflationary economic growth and for the West to remain united in the face of Soviet attempts to divided the US from its European allies over deployment of 572 Pershing and ground-launched cruise

Top officials were informed of the system at a recent meeting of permanent sec-retaries, one of a regular series in the Cabinet Office. Sir Robert Armstrong, Secretary of the Cabinet, said its use would be restricted to a very small porportion of Cabinet papers, in addition to the long-standing arrangement of "confidential annexes" for Cabinet minutes intended to have a very limited circulation. Heyford, in Oxfordshire, for Mr Philip Tles the i starting tomorrow.

The blockade has been organized by the peace camp at Upper Heyford, a group of 16 men and women who have been camped on a muddy bridleway year. It is being supported; though not organized by CND. Since February representa-tives of the camp have been touring CND's regions organizing support, each region being allocated a day of the blockade. which the camp says should involve thousands of people. There have, of course, been blockades before, most notably at Greenham Common and at the Royal Ordnance Factory in Burghfield, Berkshire, where nuclear weapons are made. Most, however, have lasted just a day or have included Bank holidays The Upper Heyford blockade is intended to last for four working days. It involves a fully operational nuclear Nato base, whereas Greenham Common is still little more than a building site preparing for the arrival of cruise missiles. Its timing is significant. Coming in the middle of the election campaign, it will focus the camp's and CND's opposition not just on cruise and Trident, but also on existing nuclear bases. To the peace camp Upper Heyford is the "forgotten" base. While Greenham Common has attracted most of the publicity, more than seventy people have been arrested at Upper Heyford,

The arrival of the EF1-IIs next year will turn the bombers into a "first strike" force, the campers claim. "My interpretation", Mr Tierney says, "is that they are planning for a nuclear-war".

Opinion in the surrounding villages about the camp is divided and largely hostile. A local woman has provided a field for the camp's use.

A local public house, its walls lined with American baseball caps and its bar with United States servicemen, has banned people from the peace camp, but the camp has received strong support from CND groups in Oxford, Banbury and Bicester.

With the growth of the peace camp's activities, the Ministry of Defence has responded by laying miles of extra barbed wire around and beneath the nerimeter fence. Solicitors are complaining that the Bristol Stamp Office is so understaffed that more than eight days post has accumu-lated. Delays at the Adjucation Stamp Office at Worthing can run to several months.

Mr Peter Letts, Secretary of

desperation."
Each day's post at the Bristol Stamp Office, he said, represented on average £250,000 of tic will therefore show that the Government is losing the equivalent of £500 to £600 a day in lost interest on the sums

The Government may be and received a written rely only losing large sums in interest on this month. The matter is still unresolved. An Inland Revenue spokes-

In the Briston office some relief staff had been drafted in, but the reduction in some areas

Christie's expect to break all auction records from abstract painting when they sell the collection of Mr Armand Bartos and his wife in London on June 27. There are two works by Piet Mondrian, the Dutch pioneer of abstraction, one of which is expected to top film and the other more than £500,000.

The rectilinear formality of Mondrian's classic work, outlining flat areas of pure colour, is the most famous expression of the Dutch avant garde movement known as De Stijl, which was founded in 1917. For the next 50 years the "quite straight" line advocated by the group was the dominating scene of modernity

More riots flare in Ulster

From a Staff Reporter

Police in Londonderry were yesterday preparing for more rioting and petrol bombing after second weekend of disturbances in Bogside.

About 350 petrol bombs were thrown at police by a gang of up to 100 youths, many of them masked, for four hours on Saturday night and early yesterday morning.
The security forces say it was a premediated attack. Two men hijacked a van in Bogside on Friday, then stole 30 gallons of petrol from a filling station, and on Saturday people in Londonderry were aware that further trouble was likely. Police confined the rioting to a small area of Bogside, and at one stage fired several rounds of plastic bullets at the rioters, who were shielding themselves with plywood. About 200 youths recently petted the Royal Ulster Constabulary with some 500 petrol bombs during the worst rioting Londonderry has seen since the hunger strikes two years ago. Provisional Sinn Fein, the political wing of the Provisional IRA, is attempting to increase its support in nationalist areas. In Londonderry Mr Martin McGuinness is challenging Mr John Hume, the Social Democratic and Labour Party leader, for the nationalist vote.

In a paper to the Department of Health and Social Security, which has sought advice on solvent abuse, the society outlines proposals to deal with all kinds of intoxication on the streets, including glue-sniffing.

The society, of 350 chief legal advisers to magistrates in England and Wales, says: "Unlike drink and drugs, there seems to be no feasible way of controlling by statute the supply of solvent".

The only area of possible control, it says, is the conduct of the solvent abuser. As the result of solvent abuse is so similar to that of drink and drug abuse, a common scheme of prevention

Most people, certainly those aged over 40, have a tale to tell about the coronation, which took place in a rainy London 30 years ago this week. Sir Fife, who celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday yesterday, was closer than most to the central figures involved in the months leading up to June 2, 1953, the day Elizabeth was crowned queen.

World Conservation Strategy: 1

Farm that flowers without chemicals

Strategy is a survival plan for nature in a world dominated by the human race. The Prince of Wales will introduce the official British response to it on June 8. Hugh Clayton, Environment Correspondent, explains in the first of three articles how it is practised in the Countryside. Bill Elliott has lived in the same Wiltshire farmhouse for all but three months of his 50 four years ago the new owner was keen for him to stay. Like millions of farmers across the world, Mr Elliott has little time to examine the World Conservation Strategy and its advice about enabling wildlife to survive amid agriculture. His windswept downland estate, now dotted with buttercups, is classified under the strategy as permanent pasture", a type of usage that occupies almost a quarter of the land surface of

The strategy, an appeal to governments, was issued by environment programme. It calls on governments to conserve nature before it is squeezed out of existence by anent pasture as "land used for five years or more for herbaceous forage crops, whether cultivated or wild". Bill Elliott's land fits that definition, with landlord estimates that much of his 600 acres has been used in that way for 1.000 years.

While the neighbours' fields are densely planted with corn down to Mr Elliott's fence, his land is dotted every summer with a rich selection of yellow, red and purple wild flowers. Pink and purple orchids grow in the fields and white ones in the wood. Owls. bares and partridge breed on the farm and butterflies feast on the rich carpet of flowers near the dewpond down at the end of the farm has escaped the revolution of the past 50 years which has changed much of the grazing downland of England to uniform cornfields. "It is definitely the two world wars that have saved it", he explained.

His land in next to the military complex that centres on Salisbury Plain, and lies a short drive from Bulford camp and Tidworth garrison. In both world wars the land was commandeered for infantry and artillery training while all the neighbouring farmers were told to dig and plough for victory.

"Soil is a crucial life-support system", the World Conser-Strategy states. Mr Elliott is convinced that his animals are healthier on their diet of wild grasses and flowers than they would be on grass from one of the commercial seed mixtures. It is almost as precious to botanists as the monument of Stonehenge near by is to archaeologists. The land has not survived by 4,000 official sites of special scientific interest and one of only 171 national nature reserves. Its owner is the Nature Conservancy Council, the statutory agency which admisisters wildlife law. Mr Ellion's home is in effect Quango Farm.

Jenkins image under pressure

Mr Roy Jenkins, leader of the Alliance, now has 10 days to get his electoral act together after the strong criticism be encountered yesterday at Mr David Steel's home at Ettrick Bridge, Scotland.

He stood accused, as the Alliance's choice for Prime Minister, of being primarily responsible for an indifferent performance in the opinion polls. An upturn had been detected, but there is a long way to go. There is little doubt that Mr Jenkins is in urgent need of what his Welsh compatriot would call "hwyl" – while loosely translated means loosely translated means comph. There have been flashes of muted extroversion and enthusiasm, such as in Kent, and even more so when he returned to Glasgow last Friday to the scene of his election triumph 16 months go at Hillhead.

In Kent, the "battle bus" -now ditched in order to speed up the campaign - arrived in one town on a beautiful morning to the strains of the theme from Chariots of Fire and a party worker who declaimed that only the social democrats could bring the sun to Sittingbourne High Street.

COMMENT

Ower the past few days there has been the instructive tale of two candidates. Both Mr Foot and MrsThatcher have been commending to the electorate a person was political background that is by no means to their taste. Mr Foot was on the same platform on Saturday evening as Mr Pat Wall, the Labour candidate for Bradford North, who is well known as a supporter of the Militant Tendency Mrs Thatcher at her Tendency Mrs Thatcher at her Friday unorning news conference was defending with some gusto Mr Tom Finnegan, the Conservative candidate for Stockton South, who has previously stood for the National Front.

Mr Foot met his immediate problem by reminding Me Wall that, if he was elected, he that, if he was elected, he would, like every other Labour MP, he required to "andertake a fresh obligation to uphold the constitution of the Labour Party". This was an ingenious stratagem enabling him both to support Mr Wall in this Election and to give the impression of taking a firm stand on Mr Wall's Militant conversions. Over elected Mr

But what does that really mean? It is true that every Labour MP has to sign his Labour Mr has to sign his acceptance of the standing orders of the parliamentary party. It could bardly be one that would require Mr Wall to change his relationship to Militant. Would Mr Foot have resolved his problem more effectively by refusing to appear on the same platform as Mr Wall? But he could hardly have done that once Mr Wall had been accepted as an official Labour candidate. He was only one of five candidates on the platform at a large rally attended mostly, but not solely, by party enthesiasts. Mr Foot could not have declined to speak to such a meeting and he would have found it difficult to stipulate that one local candi-

The new Lancashire constituency consists of three areas; Prestwich, Whitefield and Radeliffe. That they are culled from two previously held Labour seats should make Derek Boden, the 46-year-old Labour candidate, odds-on favourite. But it doesn't.

At the local elections earlier this month Labour won only one new seat on Bury Metropolitan Borough Council, still leaving the Tories in control with a comfortable majority of six. Labour still fared better than the SDP and Liberals who between them fielded 16 candidates and got nowhere.

It is impossible to analyse any voting pattern in the constituency. Radcliffe is a small but hercely independent town with a shopping centre. paper mills and engineering works. That proposition could be held to justify Mrs Thatcher's defence of Mr Finnegan. She had what might be considered the additional excuse of not hains fully in command of the being fully in command of the facts - though others might regard this as evidence that Conservative Central Office is not quite so much on top of this campaign as it should be.

Mrs Thatcher basic theme was reasonable enough; that a person should not be con-demned for ever on account of views which he once held and has now renounced. But she seemed unable to comprehend, or at least to accept, the seriousness of the auxieties about how far Mr Finnegan has undergone a change of heart as well as a change of a party. The statement he put out last week was forthright enough, but it would be easier to accept this at face value if he had not earlier delibérately concealed his past in the National Front.

The Alliance is enthusiastic over the new-style meetings. "It means audiences don't have to sit like puddings and be harangued," said Mr Tom McNally, the Alliance candidate at Stockport.

Taken at the flood: A Cologne citizen paddling through the city's streets after the Rhine overflowed.

Rhine breaks banks to flood three cities

From Michael Binyon, Bonn

As the mighty River Rhine roared in a brown torrent through leafy streets and gardens, thousands of families moved up to the top floors of flooded houses in Cologne, Bonn and Koblenz, and emergency services were stretched to the limit evacuating the old and handicapped and distributing food to

With the Rhine already 30ft above normal and still rising after almost a week of continuous rain, Rhinelanders were calculating the costs of the damage which the third flood this year - and the worst since the war - has brought to towns and agriculture from Switzerland to Holland.

The old city of Cologne stood in up to 5ft of water. Trams had to be stopped, streets barricaded against a huge crowd of sightseers, and sand-bags piled up in attempts to hold back

In Bonn, the river swirled round one side of parliament and lapped close to the offices of Bundestag members. Firemen delivered over 17,000 sandbags to communities attempting to dam the flood and keep the water out of their basements and cellers.

The swift current of the swollen river swept away caravans, chalets and trees from low-lying areas, washed awawy earth and plants from gardens and broke through fences and mounds. Towns in Germany's main wine-growing districts were particularly badly affected. In Trier the River Mosel reached a record of 10.51 metres above normal, and houses had to to disconnected fron the electric grid. The Mosel also brought severe damage to Bernkastel, and added to the flooding in Koblenz.

The situation eased somewhat on the Upper Rhine, where record floods damaged harbour intallations in Karlsruhe. But prolonged rain on Saturday night led the emergency services lower down the river to revise their forecasts that the torrent would start to abate today. Yesterday the river was still rising at two centimetres an hour.

All shipping has been forbidden along virtually the length of the Rhine, trains have had to be diverted from flooded railways and many roads are under water and impassable. Severalpeople have already been drowned in accidents caused by the floods.

The weather forecasters here say the continuous rainfall for the past month is extremely rare. It has led to one of the coldest starts to summer that Germany has known, and threatens to cause huge losses in agriculture and in the wine industry.

The shadow was dark pre-cisely because of high interest rates, which every county says it wants to lower, but without obvious success. growing gap between real export income and real income needs. The Lome countries have seen their debts grow from $6,709 m (£4,190 m) in 1971 to $41,526 m in 1981. This means that their debt servicing is costing around $5,000 m a year now, at a time when the World Bank estimates that they will have virtually no growth, and when their agricultural output and export volume are expected

The wind of change may be blowing, fitfully, in other parts of South Africa but the good burghers of Oudtshoorn are doing their best to keep it out. The latest threat to Oudtshoom's traditional way of life has loomed up in the shape of Msr Edward Adams, a mixed-race Coloured, whom the Vatican has appointed as its;next bishop there.

From his Oudtshoorn base Msr Adams will preside over a diocese covering some 44,000 square miles and including olaces as far away as Mossel Bay, George, Worcester, Ceres and Carnarvon. He is one of only two non-white Roman Catholic bishops in South Africa.

Mgr Adams has made clear that, after his ordination next month, he intends to move into the bishop's official residence on St Saviour's Street in the heart of a whites-only section of the town.

But Mr S. M. "Seppie" Greeff, the National Party MP who represents Oudtshoorn on the Cape provincial council, insists that Mgr Adams must first get a special permit from the G.overnment, exempting him from the provisions of the Group Areas Act.

Mgr Adams, however, is adamant that the church "will never apply for this permit. A bishop is a bishop for his people and that's that". In Cape Town, his present base, he has in fact lived for some years in a white area without a permit. Oudtshoorn has been in-

Ostrich land Police keen pressure on Walesa

Mr Lech Walesa, chairman of the banned Solidarity trade upion organization, today faces a tresh round of interrogation by authorities in Gdans amid signs that a long-awared trial of dissidents will be delayed until after the Pope has visited Poland next month.

Mr Walesa was questioned by the police on Faday and Saturday but refused to answer questions about his former dissident group, who are being investigated under charges of plotting to overthrow the State by force.

The trial of the five dissidents was expected by both dissidents and some official sources to start at the end of March.

There was a delay to allow the dissidents to study the 47 volumes of evidence against them and to work out their defence, a process which has not been assisted by the poor health of one dissident. Mr Jacek Kuron and by the calling as witnesses of a number of lawyers who could have been defence counsel.

It now seems that the prosecution which said it had completed its investigations almost six weeks ago - has lecided to make supplementary inquiries about the exact nature of advice given to Mr Walesa by the KOR dissident. This means that the trial is unlikely to begin before the papal visit, removing a potenial embarrassment However, there seems to be no let-up in police actions against underground Solidarity centres. Police have broken up an underground printing shop near the village of Celestynow, outside Warsaw, which was one of the main printing centres for the clandestine Nowa publishing company.

This prints uncensored books political and literary - and poems which enjoys wide circulation in intellectual cirles. The move thus shows that the authorities want to crack down not only on the publi-cation of leaflets and bulletins but also on the very basis of underground culture in Poland. In another development, a Polish military court has, as expected, found Dr Zdislaw Najder guilty of espionage and sentenced him to death in absentia.

Dr Najder, an expert on oseph Conrad, is head of the Polish section of the American-run Radio Free Europe, which broadcasts to Poland and which has been accused regularly of trying to destabilize the country.

Then conscience and selfconsciousness take over, and fun and fantasy are replaced, as often as not by educational zeal. To judge by Brighton's latest summer show. The Inspiration of Egypt (until July 17), the Egyptian Revival in Britain ran a more erratte course between these two extremes than, say, the Gothic Revival or the Greek Revival, though sometimes the same people were involved, such as Thomas Hope, Neo-Classicist par excellence, who also pro-duced some of those Egyptian interiors which led Sir John

But then, as the authors of the informative catalogue remark, it may be questioned whether there ever was really something sufficientwidespread and organized to deserve the name of Egyptian Revival at all. Glyndebourne

Glyndebourne is heavy with an donieneo which it has yet to bring quite to birth. Much of what appeared at the opening of the lestival, seemed promising, but there is much too that is inchoate and hard to decipher, particularly in the semi-darkness of some distinctly ca-

To a small degree, the fault Mozari's first opera for some years, Idonicico drew from him an excess in almost every measure. The great majority of the recitatives are fully orchestrated, and the scoring throughout verges on being too richly-figured for its purpose.

For instance, the recitative before the final chorus is Idomeneo's abdication address and the tone is appropriately grave, but Mozart cannot resist enjoying his clarinets and so introducing a note of chirpiness that sounds odd in the surroundings.

However, the problems with his production were not all laid there by Mozart: some of them have been added by Trevor Nunn, whose first work in the opera house this is. Mr Nunn has noticed that he is dealing with a formal work. Accordingly, he has given it a formal setting, and introduced a Japanese motif into the designs by John Napier, and the staging. Samurai line the rear wall at the start, there is a branch of peach blossom hung decorously

This contributes much prettiness, and I have no objection on the grounds off anachronism or dislocation. For all I know, the Minoans sat around all day drinking ceremonial teas among their bonsai. What do cause difficulties, however, are the references that "Japoneserie" evokes on the lyric stage. Margaret Marshall's Illia because she does the Japanese thing so beautifully, is dogged by the shadow of Madam Butterfly, and poor Carol Vaness as Electra certainly does not deserve to look like a Katisha strayed from The Mikado. Happily she more than survives, thanks to her superbly positive interpretation, but the production does not.

As it is, the production has only the superficialities of Japanese style to cover a basic stylelessness. Mr Nunn per-

He also has strange ideas about re-grouping during numbers. When Electra begins the recitative before her final aria, for instance, everyone else melts away: clearly they cannot stand the prospect of the old girl doing her thing yet

That one does so stop in the case of Idamante is due to the monochrome nature of Jerry Hadley's performance. This is his first British role and he may yet be nervous, but the impression he gave was of a healthy, vibrant voice utilized with insufficient care. Philip Langridge as Idomeneo, on the other hand, uses every resource with great intelligence: this is an ply-featured performance, and Mr Langridge is so far alone in knowing how to make the recitative work for him.

In retrospect, the Arne seemed a mere curtain-raiser to Rosina, by the Durham-born composer William Shield - less well-known but, in the bright colours of its orchestration and plot, and in its robust, defi-turning of original and traditional airs, worthy of uncarthing. As it grew dark, the staging gained in focus with some millet-like harvesting scenes, a handsome pair of setters, and a Northumbrian piper to match the invention of Shield's bracing score and Sally Gilpin's choreography. Tough spoken dialogue, folk tunes and Italia-nate coloratura jostle each other in a production which accommodates them to maximum effect simply by playing it, cliche and coincidence and all, absolutely straight.

Ferrets who found the flu bug

Fifty years ago this year, in one of those moments of fluke that lie behind many of the best scientific discoveries, someone at the Wellcome Laboratories in central London thought that their ferrets had caught flu.

The ferrers were being used for research into canine distemper. But it was known that a 36-year-old pathologist, Christopher Andrewes, working with a colleague, Wilson Smith, at what later became the National Institute for Medical Research in Mill Hill, was trying to find an experimental animal that would catch flu to try to establish the cause of a disease that has plagued man for generations.

Fifty years on. Sir Christoper Andrewes, who will be 87 next month, recalls the moment with a smile. "It was the middle of a flu epidemic." he says, sitting at his home in Coombe Bissett near Salisbury, a mile or two from the Common Cold Research Unit he later helped to found. That is why we were working on it. We had tried infecting mice, guinea pigs and rabbits, by nearly every route. We had got Wellcome scientists. Wilson-Smith tried the washings in some ferrets. "The day I came back to work." Sir Christopher says, "about 10 days later, he was able to report that the first ferret was looking ill, with a stuffy nose

"The joke is that the clue about the Wellcome ferrets was all wrong. It soon turned out that their illness had nothing to do with influenza, they just had a slightly abnormal form of distemper. The clue was an accident, but we were able to go ahead from ther and pass the flu from one ferret to another. It was a bit of luck, but you wouldn't get anywhere without that."

The "bit of luck" rapidly led to the discovery that human influenza is caused by a virus. Samples from one ferret infected another. Purified samples were passed through cellophane filters with porces of a known size to show it must be a virus that was responsible, an agent so small that 150,000 stretched end to end would be needed to cover one inch.

And just to prove that it was flu the scientists were examining, one ferret sneezed in the face of another researcher, now Sir Charles Stuart-Harris, Emeritus Professor of Medicine at Sheffield University, and he went down with the disease. It was the start of what is almost a world-wide industry in the study of the disease and the virus which today involves scientists from Britain to Australia, China to the USA and USSR, who between them produce cheerfully described as "a touch of the

has been called "the last great plague", but the disease has probably been around since time immemorial. Both Hippocrates and Livy describe epidemics that sound like influenza. Similar outbreaks are reported throughout the middle ages, including one in Italy in 1504 that is said to have provided the English name, from the Italian for "influence of the stars".

None of these outbreaks can be said with certainty to have been influenza. but the outbreak in 1918-1919, the first "modern" flu pandemic, left no one in any doubt what the disease can do. Around the world, at least 25 million people and possibly more died. In Alaska, entire Eskimo villages were wiped out. In Samoa, a quarter of the population is said to have died. In Europe the epidemic has been credited, somewhat dubiously, with halting the last German offensive of the war. In Britain millions caught the disease and there were 150,000 deaths. Half a million died in the United States more than the number of Americans

The disease disappeared almost as quickly as it had arisen. The search for the causitive agent began in earnest. prompted partly by the fact that it appeared to affect pigs, leading to the pandemic being dubbed "swine flu".

Today much more is known about: flu and the unique blend of characteristics which make it perhaps the most successful virus of all. Flu is unlike most other viruses in that it infects both man and animals and, it is constantly changing.

For flu is still a killer - not the The changes comes in two forms, snuffles and temperatures that are known to virologists as "drift" and cheerfully described as "a touch of the "shift". Shifts are the major changes flu", but the epidemics that still which occur rarely but which lead to irregularly sweep round the world causing thousands of deaths, millions of pounds in lost production, and much misery.

It is not without justification that flu in the production of the pounds in the production of the pounds in the production of engender sizeable epidemics but not the great pandemics. An eerily beautiful object, the flu virus looks like an elongated naval mine from the First World War. Spikes of haemagglutinin and neuraminidase, the two surface proteins, project like the mine's detonating spikes. It is these proteins that enable the virus to penetrate cells. But it is also the surface proteins that the human antibodies recognize and latch on to during an infection, destroying the virus and preventing the disease from develop-

The "drift" to which virologists refer results from small changes in the composition of the surface proteins which occur once the virus is safe inside a cell reproducing itself. As new copies of the virus are produced from produces a slightly different version of infection, they may not recognize the infect someone else and start a new wave of flu.

Inside the virus lurk eight coils of RNA, the genetic information which allows the virus to reproduce once inside a cell, this prolonging infection.

"Shift" is quite different process. A number of animals, notably birds, suffer from flu. These animal viruses, of which more than 20 are known, have surface proteins markedly differ-current theory is that either a man or an animal, most probably a bird, becomes infected with both a human and an animal virus at the same time. As the viruses reproduce, the eight pieces of RNA from each virus can become scrambled, one piece or more being swapped between the two. The result is a new virus, able to reproduce in man with surface proteins from the animal virus. Man's defensive system will simply not recognize the new virus strain, and the potential for a pandemic is born. Laboratory studies suggest that this process can happen easily, yet pandemics are rare. This may be because many of the changes that take place are the RNA, tiny mistakes occur about lethal to the virus - they offer no once in every million. If the mistake advantage over the exising versions. When a successful change does occur, either of the two surface proteins, the it still has to get out, to find a human 'new" virus may have an advantage to infect. Whatever the reason, such over the perfect copies. As the profound changes have produced antibodies gather to overwhelm the pandemics only three times this century.

new version, which survives to escape. In 1932, the year before the virus was discovered and the explosion in flu research began, Encyclopaedia Brittannica was advising bluntly: "There is no routine treatment for influenza except bed." Today, adding an aspirin or two, that is still essentially true, Vaccines can help to prevent flu, although they strains which limits their effectiveness, and antibiojtics can treat complications. But for flu itself, as for almost all other viral infections, treatment remains elusive.

Neither of the major shifts in to virus in 1957 and 1968 produced pandemics to compare with that of 1918-1919, although their effects were bad enough. What made the 1918-1919 outbreak so special is still a mystery. There has been speculation that after four years of war people were run down, that nutrition was poor, or that crowding in troopships and in trenches helped the explosive spread of the

"All these factors may have contributed," says Dr John Skehel, co-director of the World Health Organization's World Influenza Centre in London. and Sir Christopher Andrewes successor at the National Institute for Medical Research. "But it is equally possible that just about all of the impact was down to the properties of the virus. We do not really know what those were. As we do not know what made the virus so special, we have to say it is possible that it could happen

Although it is 50 years since the discovery of the virus. Dr Skehel points out that it is only in the past 20 years thay detailed biochemical work on the virus structure has been possible. "That is really not long in time we may get a much clearer idea about precisely what changes in the virus increase its impact on man, and from that we may develop drug treatments and better vaccines."

Flu research has pointed to better techniques for studying many types of virus and led directly to the discovery of interferon - at the Mill Hill laboratories - which may yet have a role to play in cancer treatment. But the fact that flu keeps changing and has an animal reservoir makes it unlikely that the disease will ever be eradicated.

"If we ever do get rid of it," Sir Christopher Andrewes says, "it will probably be of its own accord. There was a period last century, between about 1850 and 1880, when there was practically no flu about. It could always happen again. We might say, How clever we are, look what our vaccine has done'. But it will pop up again when you are not expecting it.

Unhappy end for a film star?

Hollywood - As old stars go she is showing her age badly, in fact, one night fairly say she's a bit of an old wreck.

she's a bit of an old wreck.

She starred in countless movies. The Sting with Robert Redford and Paul Newman, Inside Daisy Clover with Natalic Wood and Steve McClucen and, more recently. Six Weeks with Dudley Moore and Mary Tyles Moore.

She has been in such TV series as Charile's Angels. The Rockford Files, Three's Company. The Fall Guy and The Dukes of Hazard. She's has never had star billing, but without her all the above would have been missing tons of atmosphere and a genuine period feel.

She's instantly recognizable, although you will not find her in the Who's Who of Movies. She is a California landmark: she is the Santa Momica Pier.

Today, however, the vintage movie star is very trayed around the edges as a result of recent storms that devastated the California coastline. They sipped up her pilings, shattered and scattered her timbers the length and breadth of the white beaches that fringe the state. She is heavily truncated - once 1.700 feet long, she is now 400 feet shorter because of the savage ocean, and those 20-foot waves washed away her film career.

Today her fate is being pondered. For the next few months at least no movie crews will tread her creaky boards or shoot her in soft lights, no stellar personalities will sit astride her carousel horses.

Like any ancient film star this one has had a chequered past – and known several incarnations. The pier is actually two piers. The amusement portion called Newcomb pier was built in 1916, with the addition five years later of a fielding star. five years later of a fishing pier.

In the 1920s and 30s the pier was popular with courting couples, who waltzed and quickstepped to the beat of famous bandleaders in the shaborate La Monica Ballroom, which had been built in 1924 for $150,000. On big band nights some 3,000 couples danced the night away and then took a breather by savouring the crisp ocean spray. When dancing wanted the ballroom became a skaping rink and was even used as a makeshift city hall while the nearby Santa Monica civic headquarters was being built.

It was after the Second World War that Hollywood saddenly discovered the landmark and turned it into a star. Mark "Speed" Peterson, a former lifeguard who with the pier, says there were times when the studios were lining up to rent the pier to star in their movies.

"In 1960 they made Elmer Gantry (with Burt Lancaster and Jean Simmons) and used the balkroom as a preacher's tent." recalls Peterson. "And they filmed the fire sequences there. It was a pretty crazy time but the finished movie looked great. You'd never have known it was shot on the Pacific ocean and not in some revival tent

For The Sting, the director George Roy Hill commandered the famous carousel, which became the front for Eileen Brennan's house of ill repute. For Inside Daisy Clover, the studio built a small house in the middle of the pier then tore it down when the film was finished.

Whenever a scene called for a trip to a funfair, a day at the sea, a precarious helicopter landing, a dramatic drug drop, an offbeat chase, a simple fishing scene or just a loving stroll on the sand, the pier was called into service.

These days the pier rents for about $400 a day - not a significant sum by standards of suffation-riddled Hollywood. But it badly needs a facelift costing $5,m, which will have to be found by its owner, the city of Santa Monica.

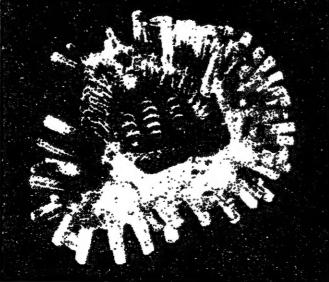

In 1972 the pier was condemned as an eyesore and the city decided to tear it down, planning in its place a 35-acre island with a high-rise hotel and convention centre, reached by a four-lane causeway, but the idea touched off a revolution in the city. The pier was reprieved and the architects of her destruction, three councillors and the city manager, were fired.

"It's a great old place." says Peterson.
"I'd like to see her saved." But who, this time, will come to her rescue in the last

PROFILE: David Bowie

Ziggy's rock and role reversal

Sexual indiscretions are not supposed to make public careers, but the David Bowie the world now knows was launched 11 years ago with a confession. Admitting his bisexuality to an interviewer (this one, in fact) who was thereafter never quite sure whether he had dug out a genuine scoop or had been carefully manipulated, Bowie became an object of such fascination that an inasupicious career was spectacularly transformed. Quite how much is apparent this week, when he arrives for the British leg of a world tour encompassing 95 concerts, trailing his credentials as a pop icon, theatre, television and film actor, and, most vitally, the arbiter of a generation's style.

He began plainly enough as David Jones, his real name, following fashions, not setting them. His return to the public stage after a five-year absence filming, recording, rebuilding his once precarious health and reorganizing his business affairs. has impressively reasserted his popularity. He is said to be recieving $1m for a single appearance today at a rock festival in San Bernardino, California. His promoters claim that 500,000 people have applied for tickets to his British performances, which include three openair shows (July 1-3) at the 50,000-capacity Milton Keynes Bowl. A new recording contract with EMI is worth at last $12m, $1.7m of which he received for his first album under the deal. To EMI's relief, that record went to the top of the charts immediately after its release a few weeks

To fulfill his new obligations, Bowie has shown an unexpected willingness to be interviewed and, even more unusually, to confront his highly speculative personal history. To borrow a phrase of his former hero, Bob Dylan, this year he is bringing it? all back home.

Recently he revisited his Brixton birthplace to be photographed by David Bailey; his three concerts at Wembley Arena later this week, followed by two at the National Exhibition Centre next week, represent another sort of homecoming in a remarkable, image-mongering career which has provoked suspicion as well as admiration.

Although he will continue to and made famous, such as the transient, hybrid nature. androgynous Ziggy Stardust and the troubadour of Space Oddity", Bowie says that at 36 such impostures are firmly behind him. He has turned his back on the trend of electronic pop which he started and which is now in full spate among the latest sicians. Let's Dance, his latest album, has caused consternation among the avant-garde by reemploying guitars and drawing sustenance from the simple, exuberant rhythm-and-blues he copied in adolescence. He calls it 'emotionally uplifting" music, a prescription for the times, and the fruit of a newfound personal

Inevitably, sceptics have al-ready declared that he is merely shuffling his pack of aliases - and such doubts may be forgivable, since warmth and wholesomeness have hardly featured in a career marked by brilliant calculation. His admission of bisexuality, apparently truthful and spontaneous, was a novel but risky tactic which set a precedent for the "coming out" of Elton John and other rock stars.

For almost a decade he had been struggling to establish himself: his well-timed pronouncement focused publicity on an unconventional personality and gave impetus to the launch of the album on which his career pivoted: The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars, a feverish. uneven projection of rock stardom in a world awaiting apocalypse. What the world actually awaited was a pop phenomenon for the 1970s, to replace the Beatles and Rolling Stones. Looking abnormally glamorous in skin-tight cat-suit and spaceage platform boots, his hair a bright-red stook, Bowie initiated the new rock cult based on glitter and glamour, once neatly defined by John Lennon as "rock 'n' roll with lipstick on" and quickly debased by Bowie's many imitators.

Ziggy Stardust Bowie his own stardom, then trapped him in its doomed persona, from which he escaped into seclusion by the first of several strategic "retirements". It taught him that he could manufacture compelling images, and the musical styles to complement them, at will; the discovery has been the source both of his unwavering appeal, and of the common, sometimes warranted criticism that he is an opportunist whose emotions are not always fully engaged. Such imputations, often made by earnest adherents of earlier pop values, undervalue his unexput on the costumes of the ampled sense of rock theatre and various identities he has created his understanding of the music's

Bowie's own gift for publicity surfaced as a schoolboy in Bromley, south London, when he appeared on the BBC Tonight programme protesting the cause of long hair. Next he wrote to the washing-machine magnate John Bloom, asking for money to outfit his rhythm-andblues group. Bloom supplied a showbusiness contact through whom Bowie recorded his first single in 1964: "Liza Jane", credited to Davie Jones and the King Bees.

The 1960s were his undistinguished apprenticeship in pop music. He moved uncertainly between imitating Anthony Newley. (recording in 1967 a children's novelty song. "The Laughing Gnome") and dabbling as a hippie in mime, Buddhism and the arts-lab scene. The mime artist Lindsay Kemp opened up to him a new world, awakening theatrical instincts which were channelled, unsuccessfully, into show-business by a managercum-mentor, Ken Pitt. who earned Bowie's admiration by virtue of his friendship with the late film star James Dean, A peculiar consequence was that he sang the first English language-version of "Comme d'habitude", which Paul Anka re-wrote as "My Way". More productive was a Bob Dylan phase, from which came "Space Oddity", his best-known song, which he has re-recorded and released several

In 1970 it was his good fortune, at least originally, to acquire as his manager an aggressive English lawyer, Tony DeFries, a consultant to models. photographers and music business executives. They were complementary. DeFries, the deal-maker, gave Bowie the confidence to exploit his ideas. But he also admired the style of the American manager Allen Klein, whose high-handed methods briefly attracted such clients as the Rolling Stones and the Beatles.

Associating with Lou Reed, the Velvet Underground's influential chronicler of dark, New York street-life, certainly sharpened his own image of Clockwork Orange androgyny. But his musical collaborations, ap-proached in a spirit of real inquiry, have generally been mutually beneficial; "Fame", for example a hit with John Lennon in 1975.

It has been a small step from the impersonations of his records to acting itself, and each new role has reflected some aspect of his various personae. In The Man Who Fell To Earth, his 1976 debut as a film star, Nicolas Roeg (who had seen his Omnibus TV documentary, "Cracked Actor") cast him unerringly as a displaced alien. Just A Gigolo, a David Hemmings flop set amidst Weimar degeneracy. traded his fragile maleness against the camp legend of Marlene Dietrich. And in Baal, a BBC production in 1982, he was Brecht's coldly amoral anti-hero. Playing The Elephant Man, a lauded Broadway appearance in 1980. inverted his handsome image, a trick he accomplished by mime; and in The Hunger he became a senescent vampire. Not the least merit of Merry Christmas, Mr Lawrence, Nagisa Oshima's PoW drama, is that he finally learned to act rather than perform. Now he hopes to direct, and is starting with promotional video films at EMI's expense.

He has generally got what he wanted. In January 1975 he wrested control of his career from DeFries, though the settlement was punitive. As his own, conspicuously successful business manager, he keeps few employees and relies upon a formidably protective assistant, "Coco" Schwab, the only survivor of the DeFries regime. His private travels, which satisfy an interest in ethnic musics, include no superstar entourage.

He lives unostentatiously in a New York apartment and a house near Lausanne with his 12-year-son, Duncan, known in more publicity-conscious days as 'Zowie". This custodianship has allegedly conferred new responsibilities and happiness.

When familiarity with our poli-ticians turns to contempt, there is a simple cure: turn them inside out and upside down. Michael Curl has and upside down. Michael Curl has done this most adroitly in his dictionary of anagrams, published in paperback this week. The PM, as Saatchi knows. can be metamorphosed into "That great charmer," but by way of balance. Curl offers "Meg. the arch-tartar," Poor Ted Heath becomes "Had teeth" or "The death" while, further back, William Ewart, Gladstone turns into "Wild. Ewart Gladstone turns into "Wild agitator means well," and Disraeli into "I lead, sir." Unamused as ever. Mary Whitehouse finds herself Mary Whitehouse finds herself saying: "I may rue the show." I cannot match all this, but that does not stop me trying. I have deed-polled the Labour leader into "Oh facile Tom," and David Steel into "Vital deeds" or "Laddie's vet", whichever he finds the more voteworthy. Roy Jenkins, as ever, stumps me, but his telegenic colleague David Owen emerges promisingly into a "Video dawn." Any more bright ideas? To get you thinking, first decipher the headline.

Election night will bring the resurrection of the flop of the century - the show that closed before it opened, losing £114m of backers' money. In March, when it was cancelled by Michael White on the grounds that it just would not work, the show for which the Piccadilly theatre had been trans-formed into a cabaret restaurant was called i. Now it is Y, and it has cost a further £500.000. It still stars the Italian mime Arturo Brachetti, but White's name is no longer on it. My political challenger today is, I am afraid, rather frivolous, belonging as he does to the Fancy Dress Party. A. H. Crockford, who is contesting Dartford, has produced a lengthy and excruciating manifesto. Reduce the size of unemployment figures, he suggests, by using smaller print, and the length of patients' waiting lists by increasing prescrip-tion charges to 5,000 volts. He promises to act swiftly to stop the falling pound: "If one lands anywhere near us we will pick it up immediately." The Fancy Dress Party has "always been against the especially off licences," and will increase the size of exports: "In future it will be sold in two pint cans." £150, for this?

2, 1953: months of painstaking effort come to a climax as the Queen walks in procession to her coronation

Vivat! Vivat! The day that grime gave way to glory

Some impressions never fail. My recollections of the events in which I was involved 30 years ago still seem

I recall standing in Westminster Abbey on the evening before the coronation. The months of preparation were over, and the grey Sanctuary had been transformed into a place of golden light. The raised platform of the "Theatre" was covered in a golden coloured carpet, surrounded by frontals of woven cloth of gold and with the magnificent Abbey plate gleaming on the high altar and displayed on a table below the royal box. Facing the altar was the ancient coronation chair with the stone of destiny below the seat and beyond was the raised dais of the throne with its deep searlet

Once again, as for nearly 900 years, the Abbey had been prepared of kings and queens who had been consecrated and crowned within its walls. That evening the Abbey seemed to be wrapped in a hush of expectation.

As a Gold Staff Commander ! would have to spend many hours in that sancturary the next day. I turned and walked through the choir screen to where the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, would receive the Abbey keys from the Dean, Dr Alan Don. For the next 24 hours, the Abbey would in the custody of the Earl Marshal. A few moments later a small black van with a single police car entered Dean's Yard.

It carried the most precious and fabulous gems in the world - the Crown Jewels with the crowns, swords and sceptres which tomor-row would move in scintillating splendour through the complicated rituals of the ceremony. The Dean. the chapter and choristers had formed a procession through the cloisters to escort the royal regalia to the old Jerusalem chamber where they were laid out on a long table under the watchful eyes of the yeoman warders from the Tower of London. For centuries the regalia had been brought back to the Abbey on the eve of the coronation.

There had been mistakes and confusions in the ordering of past coronations. That of George III had been a disaster. Queen Victoria had not been amused by the manner in which her service had been conducted. She wrote in her diary that "the Archbishop was confused and puzzled, the Bishop of Durham could tell me nothing and the Coronation ring had been forced on the wrong finger, causing her intense pain. Less serious blunders had occurred even at the coronation of

George VI.
We had been summoned to a meeting with the Earl Marshal in the Abbey in December before the work began, He had taken every detail of the preparations into his grasp. For example, he was concerned that all new timber should have been carefully seasoned. "The Queen ascending the throne to the sound of groaning timber might be regarded as bad an omen for her reign as the jewel which fell from the crown of George III at his coronation, and which was later regarded as presaging the loss of the American lonics," he remarked.

He set aside the whole of May for rehearsals. It was as well he did. It was difficult for elderly peers to follow a complicated pattern of movements. wearing unfamiliar coronets and with long robes sweeping their heels and in a few cases holding a heavy sword upright hencath their chins. Difficulties increased when the assistant bishops joined the rehearsals. Each bishop had his own idea of a liturgical pace. After several fumbling starts the Earl Marshal's voice came loud and clear: "If the bishops do not learn to walk in step we'll be here all night."

They got the message.
One who went off for a short holiday before a rehearsal felt the duke's firm hand. The Earl Marshal sent a police car to bring him back.

He came into the Abbey, pink with indignation, his chaplain carrying his hand luggage. "Most humiliat-ing", he protested. "Escorted from my hotel by police. What on earth will people think?" His protest faltered when he saw the gaitered figure of the Archbishop.

There were problems with a few peers whose attendance at rehearsals was also obligatory. "If you are not at the rehearsals, you will not be there at all", the Earl Marshal told one peer protesting that he knew it all. There was not the slightest doubt he meant what he said. The rehearsals were very complex. precariously balanced, entirely dependent on the practised timing of the several hundred people taking part. That everything went with great precision was due to the superb organization of the Earl Marshal and officers of the College of Arms.

There was however, a slight fault On her arrival at the Abbey, the Queen would retire briefly to a room in the Annexe while the head of her procession moved down the nave. Her maid, inspecting the arrangements, found we had omitted to supply the one item she would require on that important occasion - a murror. We hurriedly supplied

My ministry had been drawn into the preparation since the Minister of Works was also Master of the Oueen's Works in lineal descent from Gundulf, the weeping monk of Rochester, who had begun the Tower of London for William the Conqueror. That responsibility for the upkeep of royal palaces and the preparation for state occasions had continued down the centuries. Lintil the coronation, the chief preoccupation of the ministry had been supporting Harold Macmillan's drive for 300,000 houses and the atomic energy programme. Overnight we suddenly seemed to have been dragged back centuries.

A small book was placed in my hands written by an Abbot of Westminster in about 1307. It was the Liber Regalis-the Royal Book. and the first sentences translated from Latin were: "This is the order according to which the King has to be crowned and anointed. Eccles said to me: "For every thousand who will watch events in London in June, there will be a million who will watch through the eyes of the press, the film and the TV screen. We must be sure that what they see brings credit and dignity to the Queen and our COUDITY.

One of our problems was meeting the requirements of the BBC for a live recording of the ceremony, Television in Britain was still the growing infant of the media with a mere 1.5m licences compared to the 11m radio listeners and the worldwide audience for newsreels and

Why bother, it was asked, with the BBC needing space for its cameras and high demands for special lighting. The first time we set up lights in the Abbey to BBC requirements the result was an intolerable blaze of light. "Impossible", exclaimed the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Opposition to the BBC making a live broadcast gathered force. Many were genuinely concerned that the live broadcast would impose an extra burden on the Queen during the long ceremony. There were also important participants in the ceremony who feared that their slightest slip would be instantly transmitted to the watching millions and there were some who were mainly due to our minister. able", said the Marquis of A, "that chaps in pubs should watch the Queen with their third pint of beer in their hands' The opposition found its final expression in the decision of the Coronation Joint Executive Committee when the Earl Marshal announced that "live television would be restricted to the procession west of the choir screen but that a film of the ceremony would be made available to the BBC. I told him that the decision would create an uproar in press and Partiament. Indeed it was so. An angry Winston Churchill rose in the House of Commons to state that the arrangements would be reviewed. A chastened BBC returned to the Abbey a few weeks later with more modest lighting needs and from there went on to its own crowning triumph of Coronation Day.

into London to use the elaborate facilities which had been provided to get their accounts back to their countries, including the two Canberra bombers which carried recordings of the ceremony across the Atlantic for the US and Canadian networks. David Eccles did much to promote the atmosphere of gaiety, colour and rejoicing which turned London into a carnival city which the world came to see. I shall always remember the crowds dancing in Trafalgar Square to the rhythms of Jamaican drums and the voices of thousands singing "Wonderful London Town" as the rain cascaded down.

Before daybreak the next day. was in my place in the Abbey. I had to deal with hitches and alarms. For example, an enclosed position had been constructed behind the tombs on the north side for film and TV cameras to record important parts of the ceremony including the crowning. During the night a thick coat of dust had filtered down onto the glass apertures, and the camera operators were in despair. I told them to save their tears and give me their handkerchiefs. Below the camera positions were scated three rows of bishops. When I explained the situation their astonishment changed to amusement. I passed along the handkerchiefs and one by one the bishops rose to clean the glass panes above their heads. Without their help the world might never have seen the colour film and TV records of the day from that position.

A white light came on at my elbow to tell me that the Queen in her coach had left the palace. A surging roar in the distance was drowned by the drums and trumpets as the first procession reached the Sanctuary. The rest of the pictures of that day are in my mind like a film to be recalled at will. For me, the most arresting incident was not the hushed solemnity of the crown upraised in the Archbishop's hands, but the moment when the voices of the choir were still and the Queen came through the choir screen to the triumph and shouts of the West-minster schoolboys. "Vivat Regina. Vivat Regina Elizabetha Vivat! Vivat! Vivat! Before us was the slender and lovely young Queen regal, in a magnificent gown covered in thousands of pearls.

The events that followed have been captured on colour film and TV - some to be shown this week. The solemnity, the colour, the dazzling spectacle of that occasion are on those records, but I feel they lack the vibrant excitement, the sense of participation and the rejoicing that filled the Abbey.

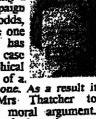

At the end of that long day I read what another civil servant, Pepys. had written in his diary of the coronation of Charles II.

"I can say that beside the sight of these glorious things. I may not for the future trouble myself to see things of state and show as being sure never to see the like again in this world".

After 30 years that is also my own

Morality, hijacked by the Tories

Labour is fighting a civilized campaign against great odds, but it has made one big mistake. It has failed to put its case in a philosophical purely material one. As a result it has enabled Mrs Thatcher to monopolize the moral argument. From the start she had one hope: to. deflect the attack on the unpopular results of her policies by transferring the guilt for her own failures on to her listeners. She does it by presenting herself as the guardian of stern "values", which alone can purify a gone-soft society. And, of course, on questions of defence she bangs the simple patriotic drum.

It is a technique designed to leave the Labour Party arguing about details instead of principles. It should, of course, have been the other way round. For the issues in this campaign are indeed moral

Mass unemployment, for instance, can never be a purely economic matter. It undermines the foundations of our society. No country can save itself from decline, cally, if it tolerates the sense of hopelessness among its people which comes from uselessness.

Yet that mood, which is growing dangerously, is grist to Mrs Thatcher's electoral mill. She was even claiming with satisfaction on TV the other day that the majority of young people in this country, including those who are out of work, are satisfied with the lot she offers them and will youe for her, if that is true, the has lowered the sight of a whole she has lowered the sights of a whole

The accusation would not stand, of course, if she could hold out any hope that the "purifying" process was coming to an end. But that she cannot, and will not, do. What Labour should be hammering home is that unemployment is politically necessary to her type of society - one in which the workforce is cowed into submission, in keeping with the "Victorian values" she invokes.

in the same way, we are in danger of letting her ride away from the essentials of the nuclear argument. To say that the Labour Party does not wish to defend this country is, of course, a malicious fallacy. Labour's whole case is that defence loses its meaning when the use of nuclear weapons is involved. We are in a new ball game because never before in human history have we been preparing to make war with weapons which would bring global and irreversible catastrophe, to ourselves

Michael Heseltine's parrot talk about "deterrence" will no longer do, because the line between having nuclear weapons to deter and having them to attack is wearing perilously thin. If, as he declares, their possession by the West has kept the peace for 34 years, then we already have enough of them to deter. What both sides are now pursuing is nuclear superiority.

And as the consequence of the new weapons that are being developed grow more terrible, so that the arrival of even one enemy missile would wipe out half of Britain, the search for nuclear superiority is increasingly seen to lie in finding a weapon that will knock out the enemy before he can retaliate. So we are right into the heart of the moral dilemma which Mrs Thatcher refuses to recognize would we be willing to use nuclear weapons first? such a situation, the acquisition of new nuclear weapons has become the alternative, not the road, to multilateral disarmament. You cannot openly accuse another power of planning to make war on you, and then expect it to lower its guard. The need for a non-nuclear strategey has become imperative in our own defence, as independent groups of military men have urged. But who is going to start to create the non-nuclear psychology if Britain does not give the lead?

That is the essence of the case for nuclear unilateralism. A majority of people probably now agree that the installation of cruise missiles and the acquisition of Trident would put us in greater peril than we are in now. It is the pursuit of overkill that will lead to war, for two can play that game. Britain's abandonment of unnecessary nuclear weapons would be a signal that the great powers could pull themselves back from the brink, a signal for which, unless we believe in devils, the Soviet Union itself is probably waiting. In such a situation, the argument about Polaris is largely irrelevant.

Labour's contribution to multilateral disarmament is not to trade weapon for weapon, but to create a new atmosphere and to proceed from there step by step towards the creation of a non-nuclear weapons world. It is time someone tried.

Charting a path to recovery

Although the Conservative Party has much to say about inflation and Labour much to say about unem-ployment, neither is proud to emphasize the fact that Britain has been declining economically, relatively to other countries, for many years. Their reticence is hardly surprising, since both, in different ways, are partly responsible. In sharp contrast, the Alliance faces the facts of the nation's decline much more frankly, and quite explicitly claims to have policies genuinely aimed at reversing it. But its claims are frequently countered by the reply that the policies are reheated versions of old pro-growth policies which have failed in the past.

The evaluation of this controversy requires a distinction between 'macro" and "micro" economic policy. Macro policy is concerned with demand, inflation and unemployment. Micro policy with detailed policy toward industry. Far from having bland or vague policies on the latter, the SDP and the Liberals have precise prescriptions in profusion, and these are their strongest economic policies.

They emphasize the existing deficiencies in industrial and vocational training and education and propose specific reforms of the apprenticeship system. For the greater encouragement of industrial competition, they suggest further discouragement of mergers, more practical assistance to small business and the reduction of bureaucratic obstacles to those businesses. The link between economic growth and education is emphasized.

Mr Patrick Jenkin, the Industry, Secretary, recently defined the aims of his Department as "a profitable, competitive and adaptive productive sector in the United Kingdom. Worthy motives indeed, but nowhere did he mention the need for better industrial education and planning. Why was it recently necessary for the Director of the National Economic Development Office to remind the Government that this country spends only half the European average on vocational training.

Having said all this, I have to concede that my own economic research has also sustained me in serious misgivings about Alliance "macro" policy, mainly because it seemed to me to run away from the problem of the unions. The specific policies on union reform are blatantly schizophrenic. On the one hand they pronounce the fundamental role of unions in harmonious industrial relations; on the other they make detailed proposals which, if put into law, would make Mr Tebbit look like a workers' hero (for example the closed shop, accepted in principle, would in practice be effectively banned by a scheme requiring validation by regular secret ballots of workers involved, requiring two third majorities from all those entitled to vote).

On wage inflation they have a battery of proposals which are quite unworkable without union cooperation, which they blithely believe could be obtained effectively in exchange for a promise to reilate. The truth is that the SDP in particular contains many activists who are deeply anti-union, but that it is also strongly influenced by "wets" who think quite otherwise.

I believe that so long as they fail to tackle this, any alternative government that tries another way of recovery will fail for the same reasons that all the others failed.
"Free" collective bargaining and Keynesian economics are simply unreconcilable, and no amount of tinkering can make them otherwise.

But I do believe that if Britain had been governed continuously for the past half century by the kinds of people and policies now represented in the Alliance, we should now be not only a much richer nation but a much happier one. I also believe that brisk economic growth possible for us in the future, and that major precondition is that the Alliance does quickly succeed in becoming the strong alternative government.

The reasons for such unfashionable optimism lie in the very historical circumstances of our decline. From the Second World War till the early 1970s the western capitalist mixed economies (meaning all countries from, say, Italy upwards in per capita income) experienced spectacular economic growth at about 4 per cent per annum per head of population. Inside the average the countries which started from the bottom end of the league table, tended to grow faster than the others. There was a general impression that the whole system was catching up the United Britain was not originally at the bottom of the league table; in 1955 we were second in Europe and fifth in the world. But we were a long way behind the United States. What should have happened is that as other countries caught up with us. we should have caught up with the US. As everyone knows, almost the opposite occurred; the other countries not only caught us up but overtook us. A quarter of a century on, we are now bottom but one in Western Europe, and also bottom but one out of the top 20 countries in the world.

The causes of Britain's decline are hotly debated, go a long way back, and are not exclusively economic. It is generally agreed that it is a joint product of many ingredients involving class, education, management and labour. But be that as it may, it remains a fact that if we could fall behind, we have potential for catching up.

HOUSE PROUD POLITICS

in housing. When the state first intervened to build homes for heroes, Lloyd-George's Unionist coalition partners supported public provision on the ground that it would settle social discontents. A generation later, Lord Swinton minuted Churchill's Cabinet about the practical consequences of the policy. He warned of hives of socialist voters bunched together on council estates. Four years ago Mrs Thatcher acted on the warning, sensing political opportunity in the break-up of the estates and the transmutation of council tenants into owners.

Threading through Labour areas there was to be a new seam of owner occupier, people with a territorial stake, social stability, a respect for inheritance rights (and as a bonus, a disposition to vote Conservative). Has she not been proved right? Her government had banged mercilessly on the drum of "right to buy" and gloried in those mock-Georgian doors replacing municipal drab. The latest arithmetic of discounts for tenant purchasers may make questionable financial sense for the taxpayer, but the right to buy theme makes undoubted political sense for the Conservatives. Unfortunately owner occupation does not make a housing policy, nor do bargain basement prices for public assets suggests a willingness to begin the much needed overhaul of housing finance. Victorian values are one thing: the growing dilapidation of the country's extensive tracts of Victorian housing is another.

We are, by any international test, a nation of convinced house purchasers, fixed on that distant goal of ownership in fee simple, often showing a yeoman distaste for landlordism public or private, and prudently aware of the fiscal favouritism shown to that form of tenure. Yet this fact reflected even in Labour's manifesto promise to extend home their own repairs at the council's ownership - makes pressing some considered statement on the future shape of the rented sector, where 45 per cent of ing from a stock of coun householders are still accommo- dwellings more than half dated. All the manifestos fail to provide one. Renters are the security. poor, dependent on state support and lacking the wherewithal or are unreliable on two counts.

Conservative politicians have motivation to buy, the elderly One is the numbers game which often had a clear eye for politics (who may have been owners but all governments are tempted to need the specialist housing and support which councils can provide), the infirm; they are also the rich and transient, the inflict some pain. - through councils charging reasonable people, and people on the move rents, through the crossion of that

> No party appears to have linked housing policy and the conditions for renewed economic growth. Yet these must include housing for migratory workers as well as mobilization of some part of that great, portfolio of assets now locked up in the building societies, for example by the provision of upmarket rented accommodation. Everywhere – most worryingly in the Conservative manifesto there is damp pessimism about the future of private renting this reflects a refusal to face the inequalities of housing finance.

> For years now a housing white paper has been needed to address the rented sector as a whole. It would redefine the role of council housing, yes, as a "residual" however much the town hall managers and Labour councillors might dislike that word. But it would also give councils a renewed role in clearing the unhappy end of the urban private rented market with its poor tenants and unmotivated landlords in order to re-launch the private rental market free of its Lloyd-George restrictions on rents and tenure. There is a role, too, for the publicly-financed but semiautonomous housing associations and their often imaginative schemes for renting; the vitality of the associations is bought at the risk of lack of accountability and concealed bureauctacy.

The writers of such a white paper would take little from the housing paragraphs of the manifestos currently on display. All parties now appear modishly to subscribe to the idea of "rights" for tenants, for example to do expense; and all - especially the Alliance - are starry-eyed about the management problems arising from a stock of council whose tenants now rely on social play over the scale of housebuilding; the other is the fact that any sensible housing policy must distortion contained in mortgage tax relief, and in the liberation of building land in those desirable parts of the country where the jobs happen to be.

Labour is mesmerized still by house-building aggregates, as if foundations laid, preferably at public expense, were the test of virtue they once were. The party's plans rely on a concept of housing need as an absolute when instead it is an unreliable and shifting agglomeration of preferences within a crude surplus of physical buildings over households. That said, Mrs Thatcher's government has seemed complacent. Unless the boom in private sector building recently described by some does indeed happen, by the middle of the decade there will again be a marked discrepancy, between households and houses, with keen consequences for prices and social comfort. The government's refusal to give any estimates of the future course of housing demand has sadly been typical of an approach that has failed to locate housing investment within the national economy or acknow ledge the artificial buoying up of demand for housing funds through fiscal distortion and housing market imperfections (stamp duty, estate agency) protected by governments.

Because manifestos are about promises to give things to people, the Conservatives do not claim credit as they should for pushing council rents up to a more realistic level (though the recent spectacle of some councils subsidizing their rates through council rents suggests the process may be going too far). Sensible housing policy for the 1980s requires taking things from people - like the benefits of murtgage tax relief, some security of tenure, green fields needed for building. The Conservatives with their acute sense of housing's politics are making no such threats, and the other parties promise all things to all men; housing policy suffers as a result.

Electoral choice placed in historical perspective.

From Professor Royden Harrison Sir, The Prime Minister rightly contends that this elction offers us the most dramatic and the most important choice since 1945. But neither Mrs Thatcher herself, nor the other protagonists, can claim to have explained the nature of that choice in its philosophic terms nor to have placed it in its historical perspective.

Alas! One looks in vain to Mr Roy lenkins to improve the debate. Having announced that he come to break the "mould" of British politics. he has put himself in a thoroughly he has put himsen in a manager, false position. Instead of proudly taking up the mantle of the Conservative leader which is truly his, he cannot break himself of the habit of affecting originality.

The Opposition is in transition from Labourism to Socialism, Mrs. Thatcher exagerates when she suggests that this transition is complete. The mudgers and the fudgers are still on stage. However, she is correct in discerning a widening gap between the Labour-ists concerned with defending the existing interests of dependent employees and the Socialists who are bent on calarging the definitionof those interests so as to challenge the existing distribution of wealth and the structure of power.

At the same time the Tories themselves are experiencing divisions which are hardly less profound. The Conservative tradition indentified with the "wets" is going down before the radical reaction of the "arids". The process was inaugurated by Mr Heath, not by Mrs Thatcher. After all it was Mr Heath who diminished the British Commonwealth of Nations in favour of belonging to a European market, it was Mr Heath who wanted to sweep away, at a stroke, the whole existing structure of industrial relations in favour of some untried, radical, systematic, legal jobbery.

But it was indeed not until the advent of Mrs Thatcher that Conservatives so far forgot themselves that they mounted a frontal attack upon the whole post-war social settlement. The mixed economy should be dismantled in favour of "small business". Comprehensive social services should be replaced by a two-tier system favourable to the thrifty and to the deserving poor. Keynes was wrong and Beveridge was mad when they suggested that. Government could and should accept a responsibility for full employment. Then in an inspired. after-thought Mrs Thatcher per-formed the Indian rope trick. She made a glorious defence of the outposts of Empire after the Empire had gone. The Falklands. the Rock. Hongkong. It is to be expected that, within the lifetime of negotiations with President Mitterand for the recovery of Calais! The brutal truth of the matter is that a lady who aspires to lead us into the twenty-first century while fixing her eyes upon the values of the nineteenth may pass for a Conservative among the shopocracy. of Grantham, but won't do at all for the better advantaged and more knowing part of her constituency.

So let Mr Jenkius put his pade in his pocket and imporve his oppor-tunity. He is the last and the best friend of British Conservatism, I have no doubt that a man of such literary accomplishment and such continuous education will know how to explain that "wise prejudice" by which: "we are taught to look with horror on those children of their country who are prompt rashly to hack (their) aged parent in pieces.

From Dr Sebastian Kraemer Sir, "Our competitors..." Mrs. Thatcher's and Mr Tebbit's words for other countries. Is it the idea that Britain is a floating shop with guns on it that has apparently won the hearts of the people? Judging by the polls the new business Tories seem to have got the mixture just right, sacrificing the old patrician value of "service", the liberal "citizenship" or the socialist "comradeship" in favour of just winning. And so they will, and lead us into the selfish society, unless the electorate wakes, up in time to realize that nations run on cooperation and not on victories.

Protestants that a transformation of their outlook will set in, or that the picture will look so appropriate and rational to British political opinion that it will start working on the attitude of Ulster unionists in earnest. Since Britain's discharge of its responsibilities in Northern Ireland is grounded and shaped by the settled determination of the majority of the province's inhabitants to remain a part of the realm they now belong to, the second of these hopeful suppositions is really dependent on the first, that is a transformation of attitudes in Ulster,

Unfortunately for the forum two tendencies which had been working to mollify unionist antipathy towards joining with the Republic have received a perhaps temporary but stunning check. The Republic's economic , miracle, which was rapidly closing the wealth/welfare gap between north and south and which was earning frank respect, has come to grief in financial mismanagement. And Dr Fitz-Gerald's crusade to purge the Irish constitution and political ethos of confessional elements has come to grief in the political fiasco of the abortion referendum, which is expected to be staged in July. The forum opens at an inauspicious moment.

From the Reverend W. H. Pick and Mr C. T. A. Burgess Sir, We write from the parish of St Cuthbert, North Meols, in the diocese of Liverpool which is fortunate to possess intact parish registers from 1594 and many other ancient documents. More than 700 entries are expected for the fourth biennial BBC Television Young Music-ian of the Year competition, which is to take place next year with £7,000 in prizes.

The competition which the BBC emphasizes is not intended as a "leg up into the musical profession" but rather a showcase for young performers, is open to those under 19 years of age in May, 1984, who have tion at Grade 8 in the examinations of one of the Schools of Music by the closing date for the competition, July 1,

Through a series of auditions, the best 44 competitors go the the Royal Northern College of Music, in Manchester, for the televised finals next Easter. The top four will each play a concerto with the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Bryden Thomson, at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, and the winner then goes to Geneva for the European final with the winners of six other national contests.

Last year more than 20 million viewers in eight European countries watched the international final in which Anna Markland, a pianist aged 17 from Wirtal, in Cheshire, represented the Kingdom. United

The competition is divided into four classes, piano, wind, strings and brass, and in addition to the usual prizes there is to be a new bursary in memory of Walter Todds, founder of the competition,

Call for 'real' tombstones

The Rev Christopher Marshall, aged 50, the Vicar of Wivelis-combe, in Somerset, has called for a return to traditional craftsman-made memorials in churchyards "instead of the run-of-the-mill stuff out of the glossy brochures".

His idea CAMRT (the Campaign for Real Tombstones), has the interest of the Council for the Care of Churches. Mr Marshall would be delighted if his campaign was adopted nationally.

MR E. M. GLOVER Journalism in prewar Malaya

Mr Edwin Maurice Glover, who died in London on May 18 at the age of 85, was a newspaperman who had spent many years in Malaya where he became managing editor of the influential Malaya Tribune group of pubications, a post he was occupying when the Japa-nese invaded in December 1941, and from which he was well equipped to write In 70 Days his account of the Japanese conquest of Malaya, which was published after the

Glover had started his ournalistic career in Yorkshire, but in 1927 he left Britain to join the Penang Gazette as a sub-editor. From there he moved in 1930 to the Straits Times in Singapore and three years later was offered the general managership of the evening paper, the Maloya Tribune

Seeing an opportunity to create a Malayan national newspaper Glover oversaw a expansion which by 1938 became the Malaya Tribune Press Ltd controlling the largest group of newspapers in British Malaya with printing plants in Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, Ipoh and Penang.

When the Japanese invaded Glover left Singapore with his wife and settled in India where he wrote In 70 Days which was published in 1947. This was an unsensationally critical account of the British response to the Japanese menace in which he blamed the authorities for failing to mobilise the local knowledge capacities and enthusiasms of the civilian population in the face of the threat.

In 1945 he returned to Singapore to restart the papers which had been closed down by the Japanese and in 1948 he returned to London where he subsequently served in the Foreign Office.

He leaves his widow.

The farce of the John Player League regulations invoked when bad weather intervenes was revived at Lord's yesterday. # Lamb leads to slaughter

NORTHAMPTON: Northamptonshire beat Leicestershire by four WICKETS.

Leicestershire, who have twice won the John Player League and who tend rather to get the better of these neighbourly encounters, were properly righted at Northampton yesterday. Largely owing to the medium-pace bowling of Tim Lamb, who came off with figures of 8-2-9-4. Leicestershire struggled to reach 103 for nine, none of their batsmen ever settling.

Northamptonshire, batting in atrocious light, lost two quick wickets to Taylor, but Kapil Dev and Allan Lamb added 54 in 10 refusal at fence nine, an upright which caused more trouble than any other fence on the course. Durand made sure the same thing did not bappen again the second time when he had a faultless round.

Ironically, the only horse in the competition to have two clear rounds was Ideal de la Haye, ridden by Duccio Bartalucci.

Germany, fielding a strong team, also had a disappointing day. This was attributed to the heavy going which did not suit their horses. The world champion, Norbert Koof and Fire, had eight faults in each round and Paul Schockemohle, the European champion, had a clear round the second time, but collected eleven-and-a-half faults with Deister in the first round. #### Strong run by Elliott lifts gloom By Pat Butcher The enticement to compete in the seventh United Kingdom Closed Championships could hardly have been put more succincily than in one of the sponsor's advertisements Come and talk to us about money runs the calling card of HFC Trust. Since the British Amateur Athletic Board were offering financial rewards for finalists, placings and best performances, over 800 athletes were only too pleased to answer.

The perenial deterrent in Edinburgh is the weather, but rain on Saturday and drizzle most of yesterday did not, stop seven athletes from receiving a windfall of £500 for setting new championship bests. With the catras for wins and overall best performances Peter Elliot and Shirley Strong earned £750 in training grants, plus the traditional silverware for the andeboard. But the money was thinly spread because of the reluctance of top British athletes to begin their season so early. So bliss Strong's pink leotard and Elliott's front running did much to life the Miss Strong's 13.15sec for 100 metres hurdles just ousted Venissa Head's 17.09 metres in the shot as Saturday's best performance bu Elliou's 800 metres victory reflected the vitality of British mae's middle distance runners on a weekend when it was confirmed that one of its top practitioners. Northern Ireland England.

Bobby Robson walked away from his testing ground, Windsor Park, on Saturday night with glass paper in one band and litmus paper in the other. After the goallesss draw against Northern Ireland in the British Championship, a match as curiously largely ignored but might also have scored on his debut. Butcher's cross and Withe's Butcher's cross and Withe's

There were three of them that were of particular note. Roberts and, to a lesser extent, Barnes, the eighth and ninth players respectively to be introduced to Robson's extensive laboratory, were begin-ning anew, Hoddle, making his first full appearance since Ron Green-wood's departure last summer, was starting afresh.

Roberts' opening could not have been shakier either in the air or on the ground. After half an hour he reached the height of his misery by stooping to head Armstrong's anklehigh cross. But for the remarkable reactions of Shilton, who pushed it round the post. Roberts would have equalled the recent feats of Lee and Blissett by scoring on his debut.

Robson explained that he was misinterpreted on Saturday. When he said it was "now or never" for Tottenham Hotspur's gifted representative, he meant that judgement would be made over the next

Billy Bingham was satisfied with his firsh defence, in which McClelland was outstanding, and with his industrious midfield, but dissatisfied that "we didn't get the goals." Stewart, by far the most lively of the seven forwards on view, almost did just after the interval but Shilton preserved. England's honer Shilton preserved England's hopes of retaining the British title.

"Scotland played better against us than England," Bingham said, "but they were on home territory and their side will be completely incir side will be completely different at Wembley." Ireland still unbeaten at home for seven years, take on Wales tomorrow night, but that, in the public's eye is merely another relatively meaningless dress-rehearsal. The main feature is too late and it will be surprising if Vocanian is not brought in to replace him and to partner his Ipswich Town collegue, Butcher, against Scotland on Wednesday, It would be equally unexpeted if Hoddle, who looked the most capable of unhinging Ireland's Referee, H King (Wales)

Stein studies his options

The question is, did Scotland flatter on Saturday to deceive on Wednesday? We have seen before Scottish sides who threatened to conquer the world, only to trip up on their own doorstep and fall flat on their face. At least Jock Stein, who has had his share of disappointments as manager. poured cold water on the after-match hysteria by remarking that he had a lot of thinking to do, and that Wednesday's match with England was still a long way away. Indeed, it is far enough away for him to be tempted into tinkering with the machine and ruining the smooth performance of Saturday's first win in Wales for 10 years.

Many would dearly love to see the inclusion of the super-charged Nicholas at Wembley. The performance of the super-charged and vision.

CYCLING Elliott first home again

By John Wilcockson A weekend of racing across the Midland and Cheshire plains in the Mill. Race gave the Great Britain amateurs victories to boost their morale before the first mountain stage today. The Commonwealth Games champion Malcolm Elliott. eight days, as many as any British rider has achieved in a tour of At Sefton Park, Liverpool, vesterday Elliott sprinted home ahead of the pack, just as he had on proffessionals, and Palov (Czechos-lovakia) to win the circuit race at The attack by Doyle demon strated the willingness of the British professionals to take on the 10 the same role yesterday. After Sid Barras and Phil Bayton had made repeated attacks in the opening half er of the 79-mile stage Stoke-on-Trent. Sean Yates broke away at Knutsford. The pace was so high that when Stauff (West Germany) punctured, he could not regain the bunch. A Pole went to the front, then a Czechoslovak. A pedal went through the Pole's rear wheel, and Barraws lost his place as a result But through the ruck Elliott plotted a safe route to hit the front 200 metres out.

TABLE TENNIS: Wang Hui-yuan (China), who has slipped down the 30-0530-05 rankings to No 8, unexpectely won the Norwich Union Masters at Kingston, Jamaica, a special correspondent writes. He beat the Commonwealth time and had six feet to spare at the champion from Hong Kong. Chou Man-kuen, 21-19, 21-13, 21-14.

Man-kuen, 21-19, 21-13, 21-14. Chou's achievement in reaching the final was even more surprising because he was a wild card entry, and had beaten Carl Prean, the 15-year-old schoolboy from the Isle of Wight, in the quarter-final round and Cai Zhen-hua (China), the favourite, in the semi-finals. favourite, in the semi-finals.

Only for a moment, in the first game, when Wang faltered while serving at 19-16, did it look as though Chou might have a chance of winning the biggest title of his career. After that his block defences were torpedoed again and again.

Another Chinese, Jaing Jia-liang. finished third. Prean had a match point against the world No 10, Zoran Kalinic (Yugoslavia), 30be-fore losing 21-14, 21-15, 23-21. fore losing 21-14, 21-15, 23-21.

BOXING: Marvin Hagler, who knocked out Wilford Scypion in the fourth round of their world middleweight championship bout at Providence, Rhode Island, said afterwards: "I'm thinking of retiring. I've got to go over it with my family. I feel as though I've beaten every body out there. I don't want to be a stepping-stone for someone cise."

It was Hagler's seventh successful defence of his title. He has not lost for seven years and with his latest victory raised his career record to 57 urns, two draws and two defeats. ROWING: Oriel held on to their headship for the sixth successive year in the final of the Oxford summer eights, Jim Railton writes. # YACHTING Bullen is the one to beat

By John Nicholls The two offshore races of the Tomatin series, now taking place on Loch Fyne, have been more like merathons for the 240 yachts taking part. The long race, which opened the series, took almost twice the time expected for many of the competitors, and the shorter race

vesterday was another drawn out

The loch was almost devoid of wind all day and only at the start, and much later at the finish of the drastically shortened course, did the boats move with any purpose.

In between they drifted slowly along, strung out over miles of Kiniyre as the classes went away at intervals of 10 minutes. Nine hours later, having sailed only 18 miles, the first boats in division A1 inched their way towards the finishing line. Several boats retired, but the ones that are already beginning to accumulate useful points stuck it out to the end. Among them was Barry Bullen's Flash, one of only two boats before yesterday to have achieved two first places. She leads the extremely competi-tive division B1, which contains 28 half tonners (including Flash) racing on level rating as well as for the division prize.

The other winner is Hilvador (George Fleming) in division D. The series continues with the second Olympic-type race today, with the third Olympic and final SATURDAY'S WIRNERS (two saries): IOR dinescen A1. Well Goose (S. Gafagner): Imp (G. and J. Fish). IOR christon A2. Starry Starry Night (Mr end Mrs of G. Bindders); Nan di Gare (P. M. Wison). IOR christon B2: Tour Bombedi ut Hornoy; Raval Tinler (C.R. Hawarth). Division C: Nicomarian (M. Carrier); Pandemonium (T. Mackie). Division D (both series): Hilmador (G. Flemm) and J. Committed (B. Carrier); Division E: Elowyn of Richan (J. Scott, Alvin (B. Dunning). # Alliance to capitalize on Steel's popularity between success and failure for the Alliance, Mr Jenkins said: Yes, I have always said I never liked it. I would be prepared to do anything to advance the cause of the Alliance, but there is no point in doing that. We are not changing rules; we are not changing titles."

MONDAY MAY 30 1983

Mr Steel said the Alliance accepted that they had not been as successful as they should have been in getting their policies across, and they would concentrate on that in the second half of the campaign. They did not believe, Mr Jenkins said, in "routine political invective

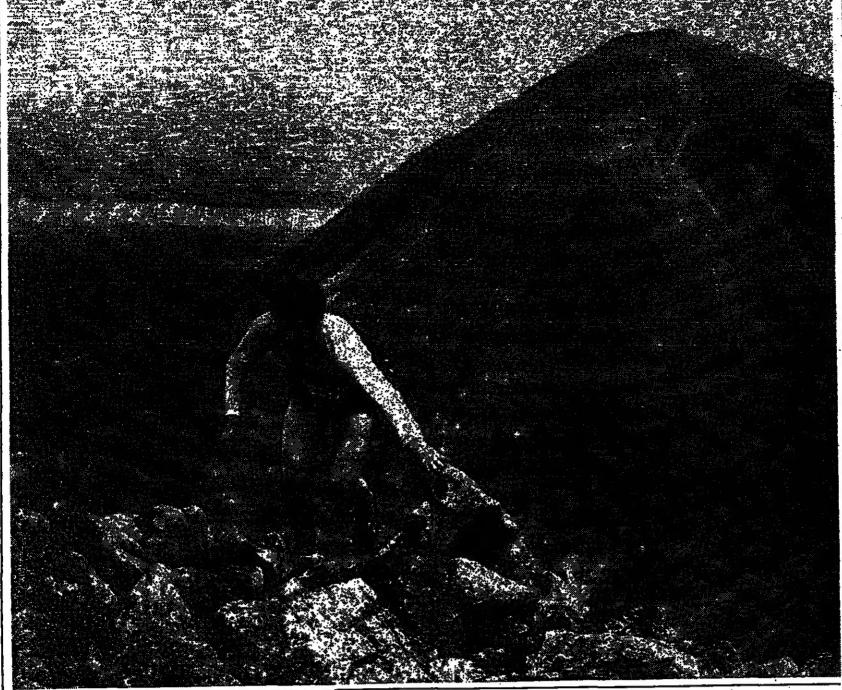

Asked if they regarded the role of the Alliance to be a party of opposition moderating Mrs Thatcher's policies, Mr Steel: "Not at all. We believe that, at the moment, the Tories are winning - at the moment - but it is our task not to just overhaul the Labour Party, but to see if we can catch Mrs Thatcher in time." Asked if that was realistic, he said: "We think it is attainable. I would not put money on it, but we think it can be done."

The Alliance was making substantial headway in areas where Labour was holding seats. The strategy meeting had come to the conclusion that at the halfway point of the campaign, the Labour Party had been defeated. The Alliance was therefore gearing itself to, first of all, a switch of voters from the Labour Party as people realized it could not win, but also for a switch of Conservatives who usually voted frem

fear of socialism
Mr Steel said the Alliance rejected the claim that there was no alternative to unemployment. "We say there simply has got to be. That is what the public believes and we are going to provide it."

The Liberals attending were Lord Tordoff, joint chairman of the Liberal Election Committee. Mr Alan Beith, the party's Chief Whip and Mr John Pardoe and Mr Paul Tyler, both former members of Parliament and senior campaign organizers. From the SDP there were Dr David Owen, Mr William Rodgers and Mrs Shirley Williams, Lord Diamond and Lord Harris of Grenwich, and Mrs Anne Sofer, a member of The Greatr London Council. Most of the politicians were casually dressed and most of the advisers in suits and ties. Mr Steel was wearing a white Arran sweater with faded blue jeans and white plimsolls.

The subject of huge US budget deficits and high interest rates came up at all the private bilateral meetings but was not expected to dominate the formal economic meetings at which unemployment and currency fluctuations will be highlighted. In the interests of harmony the leaders appeared to accept the new Reagan Administration line that high budget deficits are neither the cause of high interest rates nor a threat to the promising recovreferences to Afghanistan during a news broadcast two weeks ago.

Airline talks: Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has voiced British concern about the possible impact on British airlines of an anti-trust suit in the United States, arising from the collapse of Laker Airways.

A British spokesman said Sir Geoffrey had "registered our point of view" during a private discussion with Mr Donald Regan the US Treasury Sec-retary, during a private meeting at Williasburg.

His intervention follows talks between American and Bristish officials in London last week, at which it was agreed to extend the deadline for US Justice Department information-gathering subpoenas against British Airways and British Caledo-

Lobster for the President yogurt for the press

At Versailles last year there was free champagne, pate and a huge variety of French cheeses for the accompanying borde of journalists.

This year the fare at the Williamsburg summit is more modest - beer, hamburgers, "tastee" chips and almost every kind of fast-food im-

One of the main problems for any government organiz-ing a summit meeting of this nature (and it will be Britain's problem next year) is what to do with the press.

All the conference sessions are taking place behind tig-htly-closed doors in a specially secured part of this picturesque eighteenth-century town. Even when the talking has stopped, access to the main participants is virtually impossible except at brief press conferences.

Catfish with hush puppies

So it has been decided that the best way of keeping the press happy is to lay on a constant supply of food and beverages. The summit organizers have consequently erected a huge blue and white striped tent covering more than an acre, where from dawn until midnight journal-ists can fill themselves with frozen yogurt, jelly-bean flavoured ice cream and Kentucky fried chicken.

The eight summit leaders are eating in much grander style. Craig Clairborne, the food writer of the New York Times, has devised a series of menus for them "made from American ingredients and American inspiration" that are intended to show American cuisine at its best

Their fare ranges from pork barbecue to Maine lobster, from Tex-Mex fish tamales to a Louisiana crayfish speciality known as Cajun popcorn, from California goat cheese to gingersnaps. Craig Clairborne believes that American cooking has been maligned for far too long and views the summit as a chance to set the record straight.

However, one wonders whether President Mitterrand will really take to "deep fried cattish with hush puppies". When it comes to pagean try, the Americans can match the British any day. Whatever their ceremonial guards may lack in tradition they more than compensate for with the precision of their drilling and the verve of their music. An honour guard made up of all four services greeted all of the summit leaders as they arrived by horse-drawn carriages outside the former governor's mansion in colonial Williamsburg But the main attraction was provided by a Redcoat drum and fife band which paraded in front of the welcoming dais playing a medley of old-American tunes.

Tactfully, the band dropped Yankee Doodle when Mrs Thatcher arrived in case the song's revolutionary conno-tations might offend her, and played The British Grenadier

Sadly, a similar attempt to be tactful backfired with two of the other leaders. Mr Pierre Trudeau, the Canadian Prime Minister, was greeted with a rendering of The Maple Leaf Forever, which stirs unhappy memories of defeat among French Canadians, while Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, the Japanese Prime Minister, was serenaded with a song that was used to raise the morale of Japanese Navy crews before soing in to battle during the Second World War and symbolized the rise of Japa-

Hats off for dashing Trudeau

Mrs Thatcher appeared to be far and away the most popular of the six visiting leaders with the natives of Williamsburg if applause is anything to go by. She received rousing cheers when she arrived, whereas the other leaders were offered only polite applause.

Perhaps if the Americans had not revolted two centuries ago, the citizens of Williams-burg would be Tory voters

But if Mrs Thatcher drew most applause, Mr Trudeau caused the biggest stir when he arrived, looking like Maurice Chevalier in a dashing white hat and a red rose in his button hole.

To the dismay of the photographers he took his hat off almost immediately and kept it off throughout the arrival ceremony.

Eventually one frustrated photographer yelled at him "put your hat back on" and Mr Trudeau - an experienced self-publicist - kindly obliged.

The papers

The question now facing the SDP-Liberal Alliance was one of survival, according to The Observer, yesterday, which praised the Alliance's policies but accused it of a lack of passion and "cutting edge" in its electioneering.

Assessing the Conservatives' claim for a second term. The Sunday Times praised Mrs Thatcher for the Falklands victory and the Zimbabwe settlement and said she had changed the national mood for the better by a process of "moral reeducation".

But the country was more divided, the Conservatives continued to preach "salvation through masochism" and a Tory landslide could well bring an "alarming" shift to the right, particularly in areas like £100,000: WZ 900657 (the winner comes from London); £50,000: large paracularly in areas like immigration, the welfare state and anti-union plans. That, the newspare said, would be moral first form the company of the

Dealing with the Alliance's dual leadership. The Mail on Sanday said Mr Jenkins had proved as much of a disaster for the SDP as Mr Foot had for Labour. Without the trappings of office "his plummy style echoes emptily.
